Further up is another pool, which is shaped like a heart, and it is called "the pool of the nymphs." About a quarter of a mile above several pools, which are as round as an apple, delight the eye, and they are called "the wells." I expect if they were surveyed, it would be found that they are perfectly circular; in fact, they look so—they were thus formed by the action of the waters. It is generally supposed that some volcanic action took place in this section of the country, which caused the separation of a large mass of rock, through which the stream after wards took its course and gradually work away the rocks down to their present proportions.

special force to overcome an intrinsic downward tendency. He was a statesman—a Christian statesman—and it was resolved that he should not ing the horse and vehicle, and selling them, he proceeded immediately to the city of Brotherly ance. And yet so completely has that individual Lovo, where his intended bride met him, and soon they were joined in the bonds of wedlock. and the money was used in making a happy honeymoon. The interruption, however, was very as if about to enter upon a new and glorified stage and understand making a happy honeymoon.

made, the ideal Bescher was the idel of the American people. They who cared nothing for his church and thought little of his religion admired him as the embediment of that which Americans especially worship—a splendid suc-cess. He had risen almost above that stratum of the social atmosphere where envy expatiates, and was in the enjoyment of that species of popu-larity which snabled him to create opinion and to profit by the opinion he had created. Against the casting down of a thing so glorious—a man so endowed and enriched—the public instinctively rotested. What if this great light were to be extinguished? It was hard to think of humanity without Henry Ward Beecher in the Plymouth the pulpit, while the beautiful sparkling and roaring musical rapids at the other end form a never-ending choir. The blue vauled beavens above cover the whole like an arched roof. My feelings here were profound. I was filled with awe, and a feeling of reverence crept ever me.

THE CENTRAL CASCADE.

In the pocause of new states of things were frighteness at the class of a catastrophe so revolutionary.

These things have gone past. As the evidences of Nr. Beecher's turpitude have multiplied the may save themselves from annoyance another season, and possibly also from the loss or great the possible situation. The ideal Beecher has failed out into the real. In the place of a man injury of their trees.
